CARIBOU: THE ENDLESS JOURNEY

Every year the barren wastelands of North Canada and Alaska witness the incredible migration of the last great herds of Caribou. For thousands of years, the herds have moved northwards from their wintering grounds each spring, to the summer pastures of the Arctic tundra. The round trip is an incredible 2,000 miles.

Filmed by David Devries.
Produced by David Devries.

A ROBE OF WHITE

Antarctica is perhaps the only real standard of environmental purity left on the planet. Its spectacular scenery and teeming waters are home to some remarkable wildlife, from seals and penguins to massive 3 ton sea elephants.

Filmed by Edwin Mickleburgh.
Produced by Aubrey Buxton.

POLES APART

They're both cold. They're both remote and hostile. But there the resemblance ends between the Arctic and Antarctic. One is far warmer than the other. One has large land mammals. Flowers are common in one but not in the other. One pole rests on water, the other on solid land. This film shows why the polar regions differ so much and how this affects the wildlife there.

Filmed by Des Bartlett, George Edwards and David Devries.
Produced by Colin Willock.
